Join leader John W. (Jay) Popp, Jr., MD, MACG, a former president of the American College of Gastroenterology, traveling to Russia in July 2012. Delegates will take part in facility walk-throughs, informal social events, and roundtable discussions with their professional counterparts in the field of gastroenterology.

Your Russia Program

A few words from Dr. Popp:

My hope is that my colleagues and I shall develop a thorough understanding of the health care system in Russia. Russia has more physicians, hospitals, and health care workers per capita than almost any other country. Despite this, the overall health of the Russian population has declined considerably and lags well behind other developed countries. I hope we can explore the reasons for this discrepancy.

Our delegation will explore and discuss:

- What are the greatest challenges facing Russia today in the equitable delivery of health care? What are recent successes to counter this?
- What programs are in place to combat the HIV/AIDS epidemic and increase patient awareness/education?
- How successful have vaccination programs been?
- How is the insurance industry regulated?
